A Descriptive Grammar of Hindko, Panjabi, and Sarakhi/Elena Badar 2019-08-19

Hindko, Panjabi, and Sarakhi are three closely related, geographically contiguous languages of Pakistan. Together, these languages are the native language of about 125 million people, many of whom live in the adjacent areas of the Middle East. This book provides a comprehensive description of the three languages, focusing on their phonology, morphology, syntax, and semantics. It includes detailed descriptions of the grammatical structures and vocabulary of each language, as well as comparative studies of their linguistic features. The book also explores the cultural and social contexts in which these languages are spoken.

the context of debates about partition, historicizes those narratives, and reads them in the light of the larger political milieu of the period. Focusing on the critiques of the Muslim League, its concept of the Muslim nation, and the political settlement demanded on its behalf, it studies how the movement for Pakistan inspired a contentious, influential conversation on the definition of the Muslim nation. When Amal finds out that her disastrous Tinder match is now going to be her boss, she can't be more annoyed. Qais Ahmed is everything she never wants to be: narcissistic, manipulative and arrogant. School Education in Pakistan-Asian Development Bank 2019-06-01

This publication describes the key issues facing the school education system in Pakistan, highlights the challenges, and suggests some possible directions for reform—with a focus on two provinces: Sind and Punjab. While average years of schooling in Pakistan have increased along with life expectancy and per capita income, inequality remains high and, by other education measures, the record remains dismal. Illiteracy is widespread and almost 23 million children aged 5-16 are not in school—a worrying statistic for a country whose current workforce is young, mostly unskilled, and poorly prepared for productive employment.
